By R. Tobias This is a very fine edition of 100 of Capablanca's best games. But it has been superseded by 'Capablanca's Best Games', a version that covers the same ground, but with updated algebraic notation and analytical corrections by GM John Nunn. See my review of that book elsewhere on . If you can afford that difficult to find edition, it is the one to get, but if not, this one will supply you with many hours of enjoyment.

By Dr. J. Sarfati Jos Ral Capablanca (1888-1942) is widely regarded as one of the all-time great chess players, and possibly the greatest natural chess genius in history. World champion from 1921-1927, he is the only player to have won the world title by defeating the incumbent in a match without losing a game. His games were the greatest influence on the modern great world champions Bobby Fischer and Anatoly Karpov. Mikhail Botvinnik (three times world champ) also related how much he learned from Capablanca, and pointed out that even Alekhine received much schooling from him in positional play, before the struggle for the world title made them bitter foes. Once players have read all the introductory books about endgames, openings, tactics and basic strategy, to improve, they must study master games. Capablanca's crystal clarity of style makes his an ideal object of study. Although not clear from the title, the games are annotated by Harry Golombek. His notes are very lucid, and he was one of Britain's best players in the pre-GM boom. He had the added advantage of knowing Capa personally. Capa's crush of Golombek features in the book, and made a deep impression on Golombek for seemingly effortless simplicity. There are places where Golombek's notes are outdated or just plain wrong, but this is rare. Definitely order the Algebraic version with John Nunn's editing. The book also has a detailed and sympathetic biographical sketch by J. Du Mont. Hope this book is in stock soon, because it is almost a must for the improving player anywhere from club to expert level - chess coaches take note!
