4 of 4 people found the following review helpful. does what it says By annabel lawson Will Shortz has cornered the market in this genre. I'm never without one of his quick and easy compendiums. They slip easily into a small bag (you Americans say "purse"). Just like the title says you dash off a puzzle at moments when life becomes intolerably irritating and by the time you've pencilled in two certainties and two probabilities your mind has loosened its pitball grip on angst. Because I'm an Aussie I don't know the baseball locations or team names or singers but I can do all but a couple of the clues and that's fine. The contiguities are sufficient for one to be able to guess nearly all the imponderables and when it comes to four or five words expressions - I really love these - they come welling up from some universal unconscious. We truly do share a language. Aussie puzzles assume total ignorance of the past so I appreciate the historical and literary references. And the clues which could be verbs or nouns are fun. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Summer Breeze By Pat As a gift for my sister, recovering from surgery The New York Times Stress-Buster Crosswords are 'Breezy' puzzles. She is scooting along very quickly. She loves them. She completes them in Ink! Now, I'll have to buy her some more. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Perfect for me By Julian I like these NY Times jigsaw puzzles simply because they are perfect for my level. Some are easy and some are challenging for me. They are a bit expensive but worth it.
